SEACOAST HARVEST
A Local Food Guide

The local food movement is growing by leaps and bounds. From the throngs at farmers' markets to increased activity at farm stands, people want to know where and how their food is grown, who is growing it, and where to find it. Isn't it great that there is a publication that provides this information?

Seacoast Harvest, a local food guide, connects people with sources of locally grown food. It provides our community with information on area farms, farmers' markets, Community Supported Agriculture programs, farm stands, and food pantries stocked with fresh food, as well as farmers' markets that participate in the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program.

Please support this important community resource with your donation! By sponsoring this project, you will assist us in printing 8,000 copies of Seacoast Harvest as well as updating and maintaining seacoastharvest.org, our online, searchable database.

Seacoast Harvest, a project of Seacoast Eat Local, is made possible only by the many individuals, businesses, nonprofits, and other organizations that sponsor its publication. We distribute the guide for free, so that families can easily gain access to healthful, whole foods. And we do not charge for the listings, because we believe in supporting local farms for the health of our environment, community, culture, and economy. Everyone benefits from the positive impact of environmentally and financially sustainable local farms.

None of this is possible without your sponsorship! Your tax-deductible donation will both help to create the 2013 edition of Seacoast Harvest and provide you with year-round visibility and access to a base of engaged consumers, farmers, small business owners, and active community members.

Details on sponsorship levels and their benefits are listed below. If you have any questions or need more information, please feel free to contact me at foodguide@seacoasteatlocal.org.

Thank you for your support!

Regards,
Heather Hughes
Project Coordinator

P.S. We have two payment options this year: you can either donate online, or fill out the attached form and send it with your check to 67 Airport Road, Newington, NH 03801.
